CORONER'S REPORT.

CORONER'S OFFICE,
SAN FRANCISCO, July 31, 1880. }

To the Hon. the Board of Supervisors of the City and County of San Francisco:

In compliance with Resolution No. 14,765 (New Series), passed by your honorable body, July 6, 1880, requesting a report of the condition of this Department of the City Government during fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, I have the honor to submit the following tables and remarks thereon:

Table No. 1.—The number of deaths reported, autopsies made and inquests held during each month of the year. It shows that the total number of deaths reported for investigation was four hundred and thirty-two (432), an average of thirty-six (36), per month and in number forty-six (46), more than last year. Autopsies were made in one hundred and sixty-nine cases, an average of about fourteen (14), per month and a decrease of eight (8), cases from last year. Of inquests there have been held two hundred and twenty-three (223), about one-half of the cases reported for investigation. This gives an average of over eighteen (18), per month and an increase of seventeen (17), from last year.

Table No. 2.—The cause of death in each case and the nature of crime charged, if any. Comparing this table (mortuary table) with that of last year, we find that there has been but little change in the number of sudden and unexpected deaths from natural causes. We would have a definite number of such deaths in a given population and it is probable that there has been but little change in the number of inhabitants during the last year.

In Table No. 3 there will be found an analysis of these sudden and unexpected deaths from natural causes, and it is interesting from the fact that sufficient disease existed to cause death, yet but little if any signs were given or known to the friends or usual medical attendant. A number of these were from brain lesions difficult to diagnosticate or anticipate. The number of the forms of pneumonia, the so-called "walking pneumonia," where the patient is able to be about until near death, were numerous but about the same as other years. There were other diseases of the lungs—apoplexy and congestion—but a few, of course, where consumption was found to have killed, and in these cases as in many others of death from a disease which may have been chronic, if the friends or medical attendant had been known and found, they would not have been considered sudden or surprising. Disease of heart claims about the usual number, while aneurism was somewhat less than usual. The only other cause of death in the list worthy of remark is two deaths from exposure to cold, which, in this climate, may be astonishing. These were Chinese fishermen whose boat became unmanageable and filled with water in the bay, during one of our cold storms last winter, and they were compelled to remain in the boat until they died. In the ages of the cases the extremes are found, but the average (41), may be considered about the average age at death from all causes and circumstances in life. The greater number are found between 45 and 55. In occupation there are few having trades where the powers of endurance for continuous and prolonged work are tested, the most being of the callings where but little exertion is required. "Housewives" and "Laborers" are of course positions where strength is somewhat tested, but as there is no established price for a day's work in such positions it is probable the sum paid governed the work performed to a considerable extent. As regards the nativity of these cases the most are found to be natives of California, Germany and Ireland. The former are all under five years of age. In color the negroes are undoubtedly in large proportion to the number with us. The males are largely in excess, and the single are considerably so. The proportions to the number amidst cannot be stated without consulting the census returns, now incomplete.

The number of accidental deaths has increased, but not from the processes of building and the carrying on of general business, as there has been a decrease in deaths from "falls" and "run over by vehicles," but from a large number of deaths caused by burning and drowning. Three-fifths of the deaths from burning were Chinese laundrymen, and in the circumstances surrounding them it was demonstrated that great carelessness existed in their use of fires and coal oil, while many deaths were the direct result of the habits of these tradesmen to work nearly all night, then obtain a few hours rest and sleep by stupefying themselves with opium, when the flames and death found them easy victims. The whole city and the lives of its inhabitants are no doubt endangered by allowing these laundries to be located in nearly every block. The establishing of a Chinese quarter as a guard against the spread of fires to a people comparatively law abiding and careful, is something to hope for. Twenty-one persons were killed outright during the year by being burned or suffocated in fire, and one person died from burns received in a fire a few days before his demise. Of this number eighteen were males and four females, Chinese fifteen, white seven, adults nineteen, and children three. All of these lives were lost in six fires.

There is no explanation to make for the remarkable increase in the number of deaths from drowning, as there has been no calamity where more than one death occurred, except in one instance, when three men lost their lives by the capsizing of a boat. It is perhaps strange we do not have more deaths from this cause, considering our large water frontage and the amount of business that requires crossing the Bay. All cases of drowning are not known, and many known to be drowned are not reckoned in this or any other office, as the bodies were not recovered. So our number is probably far from the facts.

In Table No. 4 will be found an analysis of these accidental deaths. As regards occupation, it will be seen that laborers, laundrymen and seamen are greatly in excess of other callings. In nativity, as might be expected from occupation, those born in Ireland are much the most numerous; then come those born in this State, and closely following them those of China. Three-fourths of those born in California were under fifteen years of age. There was but one of the accidental deaths among the negroes. In sex, about six-sevenths were males. In domestic condition over four-sevenths were, fortunately, single, while in twelve of the Chinese it was unascertained. In age, there is a large number between the ages of thirty-five and forty. It is very gratifying to be able to say that the deaths from the careless use of fire-arms were only four—one of them from the premature discharge of a small cannon and the remaining three from pistol-shot wounds. Nine accidental deaths resulted in the year 1878-79 from the use of fire-arms.

Table No. 5 is of the victims of homicide. Perhaps a more interesting statement could be made of the perpetrators, but the points for such a report are not furnished by the records of this office. Of murders there were twenty-one (21), four more than in 1878-79. This is a large number, but not as large as two and three years ago, when it was twenty-five and twenty-seven, respectively. Comparing the number this year with New York City in 1879, when they had one murder to every 25,000 of the inhabitants, we find we had one murder to every 11,190 of the population, or more than double the number we should have had as compared with the largest city in the United States. Excluding the Chinese from our calculation—which, perhaps, is a better test—we have had one murder for every 17,755 inhabitants, still indicating a number much too large. Nine of the murders were among the Chinese, and, saying that we have about 20,000 Chinese in this city, it would be one for every 2,222. In all cases of Chinese, excepting one, the murderer was of the same nationality. The system of professional murderers among this peculiar people was frequently recognized, and during the year several of the assassins have evaded detection. These murders are of the most cowardly and dastardly kind, not one having the semblance of manslaughter or justifiable homicide, generally undertaken for purposes of revenge in money difficulties. Of the victims among the whites, two were wives murdered by their husbands in the most brutal manner. The remaining nineteen were males, and fifteen of them were single. The pistol and knife were used about an equal number of times. Three cases of manslaughter occurred during the year—a decrease of two from the preceding year. Of justifiable homicide, there were three cases—an increase of one from 1878-9. Two of these deaths were caused by police officers in the lawful discharge of their duty. Negroes are conspicuous by being absent from this list.

SUICIDES.—There have been ninety (90) suicides during the year, only a slight gain from the previous year, when we had eighty-six (86). This gives us—reckoning, as shown by the late census, that we have 233,066 inhabitants, one suicide to every 2,589 of the population. The calculation last year of one for every 3,488 of the population has proven to be markedly erroneous, we not having by 66,934 the number of people with us that the supposed most reliable estimates gave. As a definite comparison, New York City can be instanced. In 1877, that city had one suicide to every 7,225 of the population, while Paris in 1878 had one suicide to every 2,676 of the population. The calculation for New York is taken from the City Record, the official journal. That for Paris is taken from the Bulletin Recapitulatif de Statistique Municipale, sent to this office a few months ago. Both of these sources cannot be questioned, and are the only grounds for authoritative calculations, while our recent census is supposed to be correct. It must be acknowledged, then, that we have more than two and one-half times as many suicides as New York City, and a number excelling Paris, this being in proportion to the number of inhabitants in each of those cities. Our number of ninety for the year does not include one in September, one in October and two in May, all males, who suicided by drowning themselves in the Bay, and whose bodies were not recovered. They all belonged to this city, and should be embraced in our numbers and appear in the report. A record of the published attempts at suicide has been kept, and it is found they number fifty (50), fourteen less than last year. Of these, thirty-four were males and sixteen females, which, as might be expected, is a large proportion of females as compared with the relative numbers of those who succeed in suiciding. In four cases this was the second attempt, in two cases the third attempt and in one case the fourth attempt; in the remaining forty-three cases there was nothing published of previous attempts. It is well known that many attempts are made that the report of never reaches the public or press, hidden away, an ugly skeleton in many a family closet. No doubt, in some instances, perhaps not a few, the act is accomplished, but reported otherwise. A recent writer on this subject makes the statement that in Europe the attempts and those successes concealed from the officials and public would, in his opinion, equal one-half the suicides officially known. His estimate is not near enough for this community, where we have published more than that proportion. It is not unreasonable to expect that in the deaths from unknown causes among the Chinese and others—of which there were in 1877, 438 Chinese and 55 of all others, in 1878, 407 Chinese and 39 of all others, and in 1879, 346 Chinese and 39 of all others—that not a few are concealed cases of suicide, particularly as we know how constantly all but a few of the Chinese use the deadly opium, yet it is not known to have killed but about one-half of the known suicides of Chinese during the past year. Death from unknown causes is not found in the reports of other cities. If we add the recorded number of suicides (90), the drowned in the Bay and not recovered (4), to the published attempts (50), we would have the aggregate of 144, or one to every 1,618 of the population of our young city, and this, it must be remembered, is not counting the unpublished attempts and concealed successes. If we consider, as far as this illustration of the state of society is concerned, that the attempt is equal to the accomplishment, in what a deplorable condition we must find ourselves. Reports from every county in the state have been received of the number of suicides during the year 1879, and we find that there have been recorded 227 in a population estimated from nearly completed census returns of 862,780. This would be one suicide to every 3,800 of the inhabitants, a number nearly doubling that of New York City, as compared with the number of people. When we examine the reports of the different counties, and compare the number of suicides with the population, we find there have been seven counties exceeding San Francisco in its frequency. They are Alpine, Colusa, El Dorado, Lassen, Marin, Mono and Sutter, ranging from one in 179 to one in 2,129 of the population. In the counties where they have a population next to this one, we find in Alameda one in 3,684, in Sacramento one in 3,016, in Santa Clara one in 5,016, in Sonoma one in 5,169, and in Los Angeles one in 11,130. In thirteen counties there were no suicides in 1879. In Europe, as a whole, they have an annual average of one to every 5,000. In Denmark, where the greatest mortality from suicides of any country in Europe exists, they have 276 for every million of the population. In Paris, the rate is six times that of the French country people. In this city, our rate is a little less than double that of the country (that is, all outside of San Francisco), where they have one suicide for every 4,664 of the inhabitants. So it seems that our suicidal mania is not confined altogether to San Francisco, but extends to the entire State. While we say that the frequency of suicides in France is a Parisian eccentricity, in this State we take in a wider field, and, leaving the metropolis, are obliged to call it a California monstrosity.

Table No. 6 contains the special particulars of the cases of suicide during the past year. In nativity nearly two-thirds of the victims were born out of the United States, and of these there were 13 each born in Germany, Ireland and China. The number of Germans has decreased more than one-half as compared with the number of the previous year. In color, we have no negroes. Of sex, one-sixth of the whole number (the usual proportion), were females. Nearly one-half were fortunately single persons. More than five-ninths were supposed or known to have been educated under Protestant influences, while over one-sixth of all were Catholics and three of the cases were Jews. As regards intellect, seven were weak or below the average, seventy-two were considered only average and nine were above it. In former attempts, one had made one attempt and four had made two attempts on their lives before the successful time. In age, the youngest was 15, the oldest 70, giving an average of 39+. By examining the table it will be seen that the most have occurred between the ages of 25 to 30 and 50 to 55. If it was known how many of each age were among us, it would probably be found that there are more old persons committing suicide in proportion to the number with us, it being the case in other cities. This table gives the nativities by ages, also the means by ages. By the latter it is observed that the two youngest, from 15 to 20, used the pistol as a means, while the oldest used a knife. In a continuation of this table will be found a list of nativity by means used. Nine chose death by drowning, two of whom were Chinese. Eleven by hanging, five of whom were Chinese and two were Frenchmen. Six of the ninety used the knife, four of the number selecting the throat as the point of attack. The pistol was used in about one-third of the cases, nearly all of these selecting the head. One Chinaman shot himself in the abdomen, and this is the only one on record in this office for many years, if ever, who, among the Chinese, has used the pistol for such a purpose. Thirty-four of all decided on poison as a means, twenty of them using preparations of opium. Five took strychnia. In the table of occupation we find, as we would expect, that housewives and laborers have the largest numbers. Then follow clerks and speculators. The unknown and no occupation have a large number. At this time it is impossible to say how these numbers compare to the numbers with us. Of domestic condition, thirty-six, or somewhat more than a third, had no relatives in the State, as far as known; twenty left wives and eleven left children in this State, to struggle on in life as best they may, or to receive the cold charity of the multitude, cowardly deserting them while in most cases of a perfectly sane mind and in the moments of greatest need, when their strong arms could be of the most use to those they should love best, and live and suffer for, if necessary. Nine of the suicides left husbands, and two of these females left children.

In the predisposing causes, 30 were for pecuniary difficulties. Of these 6 were from gambling in mining stocks and 15 simply the want of means to live on. In 6 cases domestic unhappiness was the cause. After having committed a crime claims 6. The excessive use of alcohol is given in 13 cases. Unsoundness of mind was found to be conducive in one case, and positive insanity in two instances. Physical suffering was claimed as the cause in 4 subjects, while an incurable disease, which in every person was the truth, was the ascribed cause in 13 cases.

In the immediate causes, stock gambling has but one victim, and purely want of means has thirty-one. Domestic unhappiness has five, equally divided in the sex of the persons married. Homesickness has one only. Fears of various results, real and imaginary, caused eleven to take their lives. King Alcohol claims fifteen victims. An unsound mind was the cause in five cases and insanity in two. Physical suffering was the cause in seven cases, and in six instances a reasonable cause was not ascertained. In looking over these circumstances supposed and known to exist at the time the rash act was perpetrated, it is very difficult to consider them in any way justifiable, but there are many instances, where, in the opinion of many thinking people, the act might be considered excusable under the circumstances. Granting that those suffering from the acute or chronic effects of alcohol, one in an extreme state of anger, those poorest of unfortunates who are called on to endure great physical suffering and those from chronic incurable disease might be added to the number of unsound mind and insanity, and in charity including the six cases where no known cause was ascertained, it would take thirty-six cases away from the total of ninety, leaving fifty-four cases to be accounted for. The various fears, remorse, grief, homesickness and love disappointments might be said by some to be excusable and sufficient reasons for taking one's life. This would take off twenty more and leave thirty-four to explain away. The only causes we have left are business disappointments and a simple want of means, and it is to these that the crime of moral cowardice can be justly attributed. A recent English writer in Blackwood's Magazine, says, in relation to suicide: "We of to-day have learned to see it not only a monstrous self-indulgence but also an atrocious crime and an idiotic cowardice. We deny its pretensions to be a grasp at peace and a declaration of liberty; we proclaim it to be a grasp at the unknown and a declaration of revolt."

Illustrations of the cowardice of suicides are frequently seen in this office. It is only necessary for me to give the particulars of one. S, a healthy, strong able bodied man had risen from a day laborer to a contractor and had considerable success. Times becoming dull, he, anticipating financial ruin in the future, made the remark that rather than return to work as a laborer he would kill himself. He did so early one morning, leaving his feeble wife and several small children to struggle on in poverty. Will anyone say that if this man had not succeeded he should not have been punished? The law of England is somewhat inconsistent. It says suicide is murder, but the attempt to commit it is only a misdemeanor.

The English author whom I have quoted above also says, that: "The revival of suicide has almost exactly coincided in time with the modern extension of schooling, and is found most abundant in the regions in which schooling is most expanded." He denies that climate has anything to do with causing suicides, yet he states that in Algeria, where many French soldiers are stationed, and kill themselves from homesickness, it has been remarked that the moment ordinarily chosen by them for the purpose is when the irritating south wind blows. It will be remembered that there are more suicides in this city during the months of April, May, June and July, when our irritating winds blow the hardest.

Table No. 7.—Number of suicides during each month for eighteen years. The addition of the last year makes no relative change.

Table No. 8 consists of the bodies recovered from the bay of San Francisco, where the cause of death was not known. It embraces ten males, all white. Decomposition was advanced in these cases.

Table No. 9.—Report of unknown dead and those of doubtful identity. During the past year the bodies of seven white male adults, one white female infant and one Chinese female infant were unidentified.

Table No. 10.—Schedule showing property found with or upon deceased persons and the disposition of the same. It shows the receipt of $16,389 25 in money, besides mining stocks, jewelry, papers and articles of value received and disposed of as the law directs.

Table No. 11.—Expenses incurred in the prosecution of the duties of the office.

In suits against the Sheriff, fees have been collected and paid over to the City and County Treasurer, in accordance with law, amounting to two hundred and ten dollars and forty cents ($210 40).

In conclusion, I beg leave to tender my thanks to Deputy Coroners Wheeler and Hamilton, and to Messenger Smith, for faithful performance of their several duties; also, to ex-Police Surgeon Stivers, Police Surgeon Clarke and City Physician Blach, for the careful manner of making autopsies during the last year. I am under obligations to ex-Chief of Police Kirkpatrick, Chief of Police Crowley and the police force, ex-Sheriff Nunan, Sheriff Desmond and Deputies, for timely assistance in the discharge of my official duties, and to the public press for advertisement of the description of unknown dead and those of questionable identity. I am also under obligations to your Honorable Body for furnishing all means and facilities requested for properly conducting this office.

Very respectfully,

L. L. DORR, M. D.,
Coroner.
